

Indigenous Peoples' Day honors the Native Americans, Alaska Natives and Native Hawaiians, most of whom were violently uprooted and exploited beginning with the arrival of Europeans in the Americas. It celebrates the diversity of the indigenous people and their contributions to American history and culture. It is also a day to reflect on the historical mistreatment of Indigenous people and to recognize their rights and sovereignty. Indigenous Peoples' Day arose as a response to Columbus Day in the recent decades as a growing number of Indigenous activists and their supporters have protested the holiday for ignoring the point of view of Indigenous Americans. Coulmbus and his crew carried out violence, kidnapping and enslavement among other things which led to the devastating loss of life and land for the Indigenous Americans. The Idea of replacing Columbus Day with a holiday honoring Indigenous people was proposed in 1977 at the United International NGO Conference on Discrimination Against Indigenous Population in the Americas. More than a decade later South Dakota became the first state to replace Columbus Day, celebrating Native America's Day in 1990. Berkeley, Ca. was the first city to make the change in 1992.

In the ancient Roman calendar, October was the 8th month of the year; octo the Latin word for eight. In Old England, the month was called Winmonath, which means "wine month". This was the time of year when wine was made. The English also called it Winterfulleth or "Winter Full Moon" because they considered this full moon the be the start of winter. They also said "If October brings heavy frost and winds, then will January and February be mild", we shall see or maybe just in England.
